Note: The only evidence of the joint reign of Agathokleia and Straton I come from their coins. Initially, it was believed that Agathokleia was Menander I's widow who ruled as a regent for their son, Straton I. However, evidence from coins suggests that Straton I succeeded Menander I, with his reign overlapping with Heliokles II. Coins and monograms linked to other rulers indicate that Agathokleia and Straton I likely ruled in western Gandhāra.

It is often speculated that Agathokleia was a descendant of the earlier Indo-Greek king Agathokles, but this cannot be confirmed. After issuing coins during their joint reign, Agathokleia disappears from historical records.

The Audumbaras, located in the Beas Valley (modern-day Kangra, Gurdaspur, and Hoshiarpur), were neighboring tribes to the Yaudheya and Kuninda. Literary sources trace their history back to at least the 5th century BCE. Their territories were non-monarchically structured, and they regained sovereignty after the decline of the Mauryan Empire. The Audumbaras maintained their independence through diplomatic skill and military strength, resisting the expansion of Indo-Greek powers. However, their political influence began to fade with the rise of the Kushan Empire. Coins attributed to the Audumbaras stop appearing after the 1st century CE, marking the end of their historical prominence.

Historical Background: In 1584 AD, Emperor Akbar introduced the Ilahi era, a revolutionary solar calendar designed to unify his vast and diverse empire. Unlike the Islamic Hijri calendar, which follows the lunar cycle, the Ilahi calendar aligned with the solar year and the spring equinox, making it more practical for administration and agriculture.

The calendar began retroactively from 1556 AD, the year Akbar became emperor, symbolizing a fresh start in governance and timekeeping. Its months were named after ancient Persian and Zoroastrian traditions, reflecting Akbar's aim to blend cultures and foster religious tolerance.

Linked to his spiritual movement, the Din-i Ilahi, the Ilahi era embodied Akbar's vision of a harmonious empire beyond sectarian lines. Though it was short-lived, this calendar reform remains a powerful example of Akbar's innovative leadership and commitment to building an inclusive, orderly realm.

Rarity: A complete set of copper double dams, each representing one of the 12 Ilahi months, and all from the same Ilahi year, is something virtually unheard of in the world of Mughal coinage. While finding even a few monthly issues from the same mint is a challenge, assembling all twelve months – and from a single year – borders on the impossible.

This remarkable set represents a perfect harmony of rarity, chronology, and mint consistency. It speaks volumes about the precision of Mughal minting, and the collector's dedication, knowledge, and sheer perseverance in bringing such a set together.

Whether you're a seasoned collector or an admirer of Mughal history, this offering is a unique opportunity to own a set that is not only exceptionally rare but also historically complete. Sets of this caliber don't just come to market – they enter collections and legacies.

Minted at Imtiyazgarh (modern-day Adoni), Extra Fine, Not listed in any catalogue, Exceedingly Rare.

Alamgir II ascended the throne during one of the most turbulent phases of the Mughal Empire. His reign was marked by internal court intrigues, weak central authority, and the growing dominance of regional powers such as the Marathas and the Nawabs of the Deccan. Meanwhile, the British East India Company was expanding its influence through both diplomacy and military conquest. The mint at Imtiyazgarh, located in southern India, was one of the remaining centers where Mughal coinage was struck, symbolizing the nominal imperial control over the Deccan region. Despite these coins carrying the emperor's name and titles, the Mughal emperor's power was largely ceremonial, with regional governors exercising significant autonomy.

Above the elephant flies a royal standard bearing the Persian letter "Te", with four oblique strokes radiating from the corners — a mark of Tipu Sultan's sovereign authority. Encircling the scene is a complete circular line border, framed by a delicate dotted ornamental border, enhancing its elegance and completeness. Rev: A beautifully composed Persian inscription in flowing script. The first line reads: "Mushtari Nagar Zarab"- Struck this Mushtari at Nagar, Below, in graceful calligraphy, appears the date: "Sanah 1226 Mauludi" Scattered across the field are elegant dotted rosettes, adding aesthetic charm and balance to the layout.

A well-centered, sharply struck coin with deep, bold details and superb visual appeal. A minor reverse dent does not detract from its Extra Fine+ grade. Exceptionally rare and desirable, this specimen stands out for its strike quality, preservation, and elegance—an outstanding addition to any distinguished Mysore collection.

195. Rohilkhand Kingdom, Najib Khan (1748 – 1770 AD/ 1161 – 1184 AH), INO Ahmad Shah Durrani, Silver Rupee, 11.10 grms, AH1183/R21, Minted at Najibabad (Bijnor), Extra Fine, Extremely Rare.

Najibabad was established in the 1740s by the Rohilla Nawab Najib-ud-Daula, an influential Afghan military leader, in the Rohilkhand region of present-day western Uttar Pradesh. This town became the political and cultural center for the Najibabadi branch of the Rohilla Afghans, who were originally Pashtun tribes from the mountainous regions of western Pakistan and Afghanistan before settling in India. From approximately AH 1168 until its conquest by the Nawab of Awadh at the close of AH 1187, coins bearing the name of the Mughal Emperor were minted annually in Najibabad. While the coin designs up to AH 1176 reflected purely Mughal artistry, from AH 1177 the Rohillas introduced their emblem—a stylized katar—next to the regnal year on the reverse side, symbolizing their growing autonomy. Around AH 1180, during the Durrani forces' advance into India, Najibabad briefly minted silver and gold coins bearing the Rohilla symbol under the name of Durrani ruler Ahmad Shah, likely as a political move to secure Durrani support against regional rivals like the Nawabs of Awadh. Najib Khan himself rose swiftly in the Mughal administration, becoming Mir Bakshi, the chief of the Mughal army, and earning the prestigious title Najib-ud-Daula. A skilled statesman, he emerged as a dominant power broker in Delhi during the Mughal Empire's decline and played a decisive role in the Third Battle of Panipat in 1761 by allying with Ahmad Shah Abdali against the Marathas, significantly shaping the political landscape of 18th-century North India.

A very short-lived issue, featuring a gold mohur listed in SARC Auction 49, lot 647, sold in 2024 for $10,000. The description notes that no silver coins of this type are known or recorded, making this piece the first of its kind to appear.

This silver rupee bears a bold Nagari countermark "JA," unmistakably attributing it to the State of Janjira. What sets this coin apart is the presence of a Fasli date—a rare and significant feature that aligns it with Presidency-style coinage, yet it retains the distinct fabric and aesthetics of Peshwa-Maratha tradition. This striking convergence of regional sovereignty and colonial influence captures a fascinating moment in numismatic history, where two powerful legacies briefly converged in silver. While several Janjira-marked rupees have surfaced over time, this appears to be the first known example bearing a Fasli date, making it a truly exceptional and unusual specimen

Chintadripet, now a vibrant neighborhood in Chennai, once held quiet importance during the British colonial era as a lesser-known minting site under the Madras Presidency. Established in 1734 as a settlement for artisans and weavers, its strategic location near Fort St. George made it ideal for small-scale minting by the East India Company. Today, its minting legacy is nearly forgotten, yet collectors value its connection to the formative years of British monetary presence in southern India.

During the reign of João IV (1640–1656), Portuguese India saw a renewed focus on consolidation and defense following the end of Spanish rule. Goa remained the administrative and religious center, while efforts were made to secure key territories amid growing threats from the Dutch and English. João IV strengthened fortifications and supported missionary activities, aiming to preserve Portuguese influence in the region. Though expansion was limited, his reign marked a critical phase of maintaining control over existing Indian holdings during a period of intense European rivalry, ensuring that Portuguese presence in India endured despite mounting external pressures.

MEDALS & TOKENS

Lot No - 342

- 342. India General Service Medal 1895. While the major wars of the early and mid.-eighteenth century- such as the Afghan War, Crimean War, and the Indian Mutiny were commemorated by the issue of medals, the number of smaller campaigns waged all around the frontiers of the Empire became too many, and the issue of a distinctive medal for each became impractical. This gave birth to the idea of a General Service Medal, meant to be decorated by a clasp bearing the specific area of action. Campaigns conducted within the Indian Empire were designated as India General Service (IGS) Medal. By this device, medals of the same design could be awarded for different campaigns. The medal presented here is the second IGS Medal introduced for the period 1895-1902. In this new design, the obverse carries the late Victorian effigy of the reigning monarch with her titles. The reverse the standard of the British Empire held aloft by a British and an Indian soldier, each carrying his respective weapon. The action commemorated here was on the Punjab Frontier 1897-98 (see clasp). The name of the awardee as on the edge. It reads: 3534 Sepoy Lachman Singh 21st Pjb Infy. The last abbreviation stands for Punjab Infantry. Silver.

- 348. General Service Medal 1918-62. Indian forces were deployed in action in all most all the frontiers of the British Empire. The medal presented here is for action in Iraq in the period 1919-20, soon after the end of the Great War (also called the First World War). While the armistice was signed signaling the end of the War in November 1918, minor actions continued well after the war had ended in Europe. The obverse carried the effigy of George V, the reverse carries the image of Britannia, as a winged goddess of Victory placing a wreath on the symbols of the Air Force (wings) and the Army (sword). The clasp carries the word 'Iraq'. On the edge is imprinted the name of the recipient: 358 Sepoy Pandu Nigudse 2-116 Mahrattas

What is significant about this medal, is that on the end of the Great War, several soldiers were demobilized and the regiments of the army were reorganized in 1922. At this time 116 Mahrattas was disbanded, and the soldiers then serving in this regiment were merged into others. Makes this a rare regiment. Silver.

Lot No - 357

357. British India, George VI, 2 rupees bundle, signed by C.D. Deshmukh, D74 265301 to D74 265400, Mint Condition

British India currency bundles are incredibly rare, and finding one in this condition is nearly impossible. This exceptional bundle from the George VI period is free of stains, rust marks, or edge wear, with the original iron pin still intact without any rust. What truly sets it apart is the pin placement—neatly positioned at the edge, ensuring the watermark and design remain completely undisturbed. Most British India bundles suffer from pinholes that damage key features of the note, making this a rare exception. A once-in-a-decade opportunity to own a perfectly preserved piece of British India's monetary heritage.

- 393. Wartime Coins of Occupied Denmark (1941–43) – Set of 5 Zinc Coins Although Denmark declared neutrality during World War II, it was occupied by Germany on April 9, 1940, serving as a strategic base for the invasion of Norway. Initially a protectorate, Denmark came under direct German military occupation in August 1943. Throughout this period, King Christian X and the Danish government remained in the country, albeit with growing tension. This complex political situation is reflected in the wartime coinage: while copper, nickel, and other metals were requisitioned for the war effort, the coins continued to bear the royal cypher but were minted exclusively in zinc, symbolizing both continuity and hardship.

Wartime Coins of the Netherlands (1941–44) – Set of 7 (Three Silver, Four Zinc) Despite declaring neutrality, the Netherlands was invaded by Nazi Germany on May 10, 1940, aiming to control its strategic airports and industrial infrastructure for the war effort. The Dutch forces surrendered within five days, prompting Queen Wilhelmina and the government to flee to London. Under German occupation, the 10 and 25 cent coins initially continued to be minted in silver, bearing the Queen's effigy. However, as the occupation intensified, the coinage shifted to zinc and omitted the Queen's image. Following liberation in 1944, the silver coins were restored to their prewar design, resuming the tradition of 10 and 25 cent silver pieces.
